

NEW GUINEA.

In an article descriptive of our new protectorate in the Southern seas, the Daily Telegraph contains the following remarks: "The climate of the coast, which we have now taken under British protection, should prove unhealthy, it is certain that inland, among the magnificent mountain ranges, and in the European forests, as well as in the lowlands and plains, there must be splendid pastures, if only the roads to them were constructed. Moreover, the report as to the climate of places like Port Moresby, which are less surrounded with swamp, is not at all unfavorable. On the whole, the best prospect of New Guinea seems to lie in the utilization of active labor on the coast, the vigorous exploration of the interior, and the development of the trade capabilities of the whole country; for it need not be said that the prohibition to form settlements cannot long be maintained."

With respect to the relations of the Australian colonies to our new acquisition, the Morning Post points out that the "federation of the colonies has grown out of the very circumstances which have led to British Protectorate in New Guinea, and an arrangement has been arrived at by which the confederation will have an equal share of the expenditure which will be necessitated by this development of Imperial obligations in the southern hemisphere. The Protectorate has been sent to the Commander of her Majesty's forces in the South-Western Pacific to proclaim the protectorate in the south of New Guinea, and in due time a High Commissioner will be appointed to make that protectorate a tangible reality. The Papuans are naturally unconscious of the change which has been effected in their political condition and their conversion into subjects of the British Crown; but though their wishes have not been consulted, the change is one by which they cannot fail to benefit. It will not be possible for enterprising joint-stock companies to acquire their lands by lease or purchase, and they will be left for possibly a long time to come in undisturbed enjoyment of their homesteads and hunting grounds. The immediate effect of the proclamation of the Protectorate will be to prevent others stopping in and appropriating this extensive territory, and this is all that the Australian colonies desire."
